How will you know that your home is accessible to accommodate a person with a disability or an elderly person?

Thank you for agreeing to host people with disabilities and the elderly in your home during a state of war.

To know if your home is tailored to the needs of your guests, you should check some information and pass it on to them.

In this item, we have prepared a basic test form for you that will allow a description of accessibility in the home.

The questions on the test form include accessibility for people with physical disabilities, hearing, sight, communication and more.

Therefore, there are diverse questions that describe different types of accessibility.

The form is the basis for coordinating expectations, but the sequel includes a conversation and understanding that the accommodation conditions are indeed suitable for everyone.

For a person with a disability the most accessible home is usually his own home, but in time of war there is no choice, and he must vacate, the options are limited, so any opening of an accessible host home is welcome.

Below is a basic test form for describing accessibility in a private home.
